Generational Engagement in the Workplace: To Tech Or Not To Tech

By: Katherine McCord of Titan Management

Ageism:

The practice or state of being
prejudice or bias
against a person
based on their age

Intersectional Diversity

Diversities such as physical, neuro, gender, cultural, etc. often coexist in an individual.

Older does not mean:

- Slow to learn
- Set in their ways
- Close to retirement

Younger does not mean:

- Quick to learn
- Looking for long term
- Un-wise

Creating Effective Inclusive Communication

Structure

Make sure that all communication is well structured and organized using sections, headings, and bullets. Try to always keep the same structure.

Plain English

Keep your wording direct and concise. Avoid words that everyone may not know. Choose the best words to express what you need accomplished.

Color & Contrast

Using color and bolding to emphasize section headings and most vital information is highly helpful. Consistent color coding can also be useful.

Images

Many people are visual learners and adding images that depict your message will help it to be absorbed effectively. Keep images diverse as well.

Links

Adding links will help add clarity. Include links to additional instructions, videos, etc... Describe your links. Do not just put "click here".

Tables

Simple tables are a highly effective way to communicate. Avoid complicated elements and keep it both concise and clean in appearance.

Tools and Styles

Multi-Aspect Communication

Use tools and templates that have type, links, visuals, and audio components.

Built-In Accommodation

Find tools that allow users to adjust the tool based on diagnosis or diversity.

Inclusive Responses

Utilize tools that have multiple message and response options (receive message in type, respond in voicemail).

Collaboration
tools are terrific,
and business
management
systems are great,
but don't over-
complicate it.
